Wall Street Journal bestselling author Nicole Snow returns with a hilarious office romance where two archenemies who drive each other crazy pretend they're madly in love.

Strange men do funny things when you score the last cinnamon roll.
Sometimes he rages about the high crime of jacking his precious pastry.
Sometimes he offers you ludicrous bribes to buy it back.
And sometimes—after shattering your faith in humanity—you find out he's your new boss.

I'm not laughing.

My sweet tooth betrayed me and Lincoln Burns is one bad sugar rush.
A coldhearted grump. A mile-wide ego. An eligible bachelor who doesn't “do” dating.

Did I mention Mr. Congeniality runs a fashion empire with weddings in its sights?

Of course he does.

And, of course, weddings make me gag after my ex made my heart roadkill.

Every instinct I have screams run.

But money talks, and Lincoln's deep pockets roar.

One big fat bonus proposal lures me into his world.

Somehow, our vicious fights become vivid flirting.

His secrets thrill me in the worst ways.

Then he makes a second proposal.

Pretend we're engaged. Smile for pretty photos like we're soulmates. Dress up like we're actually getting married.

Oh, how I wish cinnamon rolls came with warnings.

It's all sticky sweet heaven until you catch feelings for the bossman from hell...

Full-length enemies-to-lovers romance loaded with uh-ohs. Office banter, pastry mischief, slow-burn spice, plus one bossy suit who might stop stomping around long enough to realize he's falling hopelessly in love.
