Phoebe

Sniper is one of the most difficult men I've ever met.

He is crass. He is insulting.

And he absolutely refuses to get any help to address his issues.

But deep inside, I know he is a man in pain, a man who has endured more suffering than most can even dream about.

I know he is a man tormented by his past.

And he is also a man who sets my entire body on fire.

I know my feelings for him are inappropriate for several reasons; he is my client, and he fights me every chance he gets.

But I'll never give up on him.

Because deep inside, Sniper is a man with a shattered heart.

Sniper

I've lived through battles worse than most men can imagine. The scars on my face are a testament to that.

I served my country well and I am left with nightmares that plague me daily.

But the biggest nightmare is having to open up to my pretty new therapist about everything that was done to me.

Impossible.

When my teammates force me to begin therapy, I imagine it to be very much like what I was forced to endure as a kid.

Except my therapist is not what I expect. She's beautiful, tenacious and has so much heart it terrifies me.

She is also out of my league. I look like a monster and act like one too.

But Phoebe is not scared of the monster. As a matter of fact, she faces everything I throw at her head on.

And I think this is one battle I'm going to lose.
